Associate Professor Simon Barrie is Associate Director of the Institute for Teaching and Learning at The University of Sydney. Simon's research explores teaching and learning in universities, in particular the development of graduate attributes. The conceptual model of graduate attributes which he developed has helped to explain many of the challenges surrounding previous efforts to incorporate these attributes in university curricula. He is currently leading a national project funded by the ALTC which extends this work to consider the structural and institutional barriers to curriculum renewal to achieve graduate attributes. Simon is currently a consultant to several universities, higher education organisations and national projects on the topic of graduate attributes in various countries including Australia, Scotland, England, Hong Kong and Sweden.